

ABSTRACT

Lens arrays facilitate intermodulation of spatial and angular resolutions. The arrays are configured to have observable spatial resolutions significantly different from (and generally higher than) the pitch of the lens array, and may be used, for example, be used to simulate three-dimensional scenes.